Live outside the Box

The world of recreation travel is rooted in the escape from boundaries, the freedom from limitations. Yet, for the history of motorcoaches, people have said goodbye to the sunset when they step inside.

Now, remove the final boundary between you and your dream vistas. Live outside the box, and leave your shoes off while you're at it. The sunset awaits.

Eat Well, Live Well

The Country Coach Veranda is tailor-fit to upgrade each daily highlight. On select floorplans, easily relocate the dining table to the Veranda deck, and eat out without going out. A beautiful view, a little wine, a little music, and that inexpressible moment that will remain in your memory forever. Find it in the Country Coach Veranda.

Let out a little line, while within easy reach of your cool drink. Pick your favorite spot, and bring your home along for the ride. Stable and easily accessible, the Veranda is more than wheelchair friendly, it also helps you tread lighter. If you so choose, the only footprints to remember you by will be the tire tracks... and a few worn out fish.

Don't sacrifice relaxing time for some family time. With the Country Coach Veranda, enjoy the outdoors your way while the kids enjoy it their way. Savor the comfort of your Country Coach motorcoach, keeping an easy eye and ear on playing kids and pets. And enjoy the day together, with a little of everyone's favorite pastimes.

Engineered Like...Well, Like a Country Coach

The Country Coach Veranda was born of the same steel, the same engineering, the same philosophy for overbuilding that has given us the DynoMax Chassis. The structure and mechanism are inherently solid, well-built, high capacity, and easy to maintain and service.

Safety • Function • Design

Following the mantra that has been the foundation of Country Coach quality and customer satisfaction for 35 years, the Company's engineers and craftspeople place safety and function as their top priority. The Veranda deck passed substantial weight load and repetition testing, only earning approval when the load held far exceeded the rated capacity, and when the repetition of operation far exceeded the expected lifetime. In addition, the Veranda deck's railing system is built to meet residential code when deployed, and is designed to provide comfortable and attractive containment of the deck occupants.

Multiple fail-safes are designed into the Veranda components to remove some of the potential "oops" factors. For example, when extended, the exterior TV disables Veranda deck operation. Also, when either the Veranda deck is extended, or when the sliding glass doors are not locked, the transmission is disabled automatically.

Simply put, the Veranda IS Country Coach. Solid, well built, reliable, and engineered for maximum livability.

How it All Started

Born of an idea conceived by company president & CEO Jay Howard, the Veranda was developed in top secret conditions for 18 months before making its market debut in July, 2008.

The concept of inside-out living is rooted in Jay's experience in the desert of Indio, California, where he & Bob Lee developed a luxury motorcoach resort. There, at each space a small house was constructed with huge sliding glass walls that could be opened wide to unite the interior with the open patio. Borrowed from the world of fine custom homes, this design feature proved to be a resounding success with motorcoach owners.

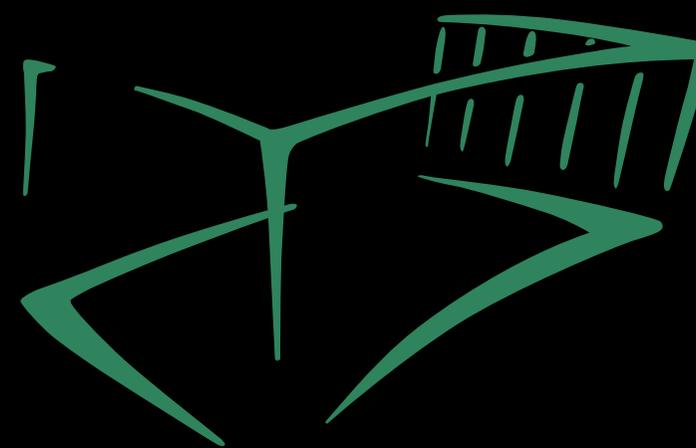

Determined to bring this same lifestyle design into the world of luxury motorcoaches, Country Coach's R&D and Engineering teams took on the challenge to answer the many questions, and find a way to make the vision a reality.

The company's highly skilled group of engineers developed the project behind a canvas curtain in the company's secure research-and-development building. Less than 20 people at Country Coach knew about the project throughout its first nine months of development. Behind that curtain, the system was built, tested, re-tested, re-built, proto-typed as a new motorcoach, and tested anew.

Today, this remarkable entirely new motorcoach is more than its team of creators could have dreamed it could be. The Veranda is a testament to Country Coach's renewed dedication to constant lifestyle enhancement through innovation.

So, as the inventors apply for patents, and customers discover a whole new way to enjoy their lifestyle, the Country Coach team is hard at work on more than 30 entirely new projects, set to debut over more than ten years. The Veranda is simply the first RV revolution launched from the behind R&D's canvas curtain. Customers are asking for lifestyle upgrades, and Country Coach is answering. There is so much more on the way.
